re: Children's TV Programming

Sir:

As a member of the Association for Family and Community Education, I fully endorse efforts being made to improve television programming for children. Drug use, gang membership, availability of guns, etc. is all too often learned from the footstool of the media.

I applaud Mr. Roger's Neighborhood and Sesame Street, but programs are needed for pre-teens and teens that are geared to their age level, that are educational and wholesome; programs that make learning fun and challenging.

Many Television stations could improve their programs already provided by presenting them during the hours children are more apt to be watching. Functional illiteracy and drop outs are serious problems. It is essential that the FCC stand up for children!

Yours truly,

Celia D. Nott,

Dear Sir

As President of the Bixbee Bee members of the National Association for Family & Community Education I wish to urge you to insure fully the Children's Television Act of 1990 so our children will have more informational programs to view at a time suitable for them.

T.V. is so influential to them.
I would wish that the programs also have a good moral one for them.

Thank you for any influence
you may use to further better TV programming for all the children in the U.S.

Very Sincerely -
Helen Krust

Dear Mr. Hundt,

Although it has been a while since we've spoken, I want to reiterate how much I appreciated the opportunity to address the En Banc Hearing on Children's Television. It was exciting to meet with you, the other commissioners, and other critics and producers.

My colleague from Disney may have seemed forceful. He and I were concerned about well intended language being taken too literally by lawmakers in the future.

I feel that those of us, who make television shows, share your vision of making modern kids shows valuable.

I look forward to seeing you again soon.

Sincerely,

Bill Dye

Dear Sir:

The National Association for Family and Community Education volunteer organization has been working to improve television programming for children.

Children need special consideration. They are the country's future.

There is a tremendous potential for the educational use of television.

A survey conducted by the NAFCE shows there is a need for programs for the 7 to 15 age group. A few excellent programs have been developed as a result of the Children's Television Act for the pre-school group.

We appreciate your efforts and urge you to expand the good work and eliminate the sex, violence and dirty language in prime time television.

Yours truly,

To The Honorable Reed Hundt, Chairman:

The power of television is endless. Television is able to educate, entertain, and inform people daily. Nevertheless, television can be negative, especially to children.

I am writing this letter to express the views of many concerned Americans. Children are our country's future and this needs to be considered when dealing with what programs are shown when children are most likely to be watching. There is a need for more educational programs for children.

The Children's Television Act of 1990 tried to provide more educational and informational programs for children. At the time, many actions seemed successful or at least seemed to make the television stations aware of the concern of the need for better programs for children. Although a few wonderful programs have been developed, nevertheless, it is time to review the television stations and enforce some positive actions.

Many television stations still fail to provide educational and informational programs especially for children. To meet FCC requirements, they try to justify programs as educational even though they are not. With clearer guidelines and enforced guidelines, more quality programs should be produced.

The National Association for Family and Community Education volunteer organization has been hard at work to improve television programming for children. The positive potential the power of television has for educational use is tremendous.

As a college student I realize the need for educational programs. Children need television to be a positive influence in their lives. Won't you help? Our future depends on it.

Thank you for listening.
A concerned student,

Stephanie M. Patton
